Section 23 – Personal Information

Incident records, including specific locations within airport premises and response details, may directly or indirectly identify passengers, employees, contractors, or other individuals involved in or affected by incidents. Disclosure may reveal sensitive personal circumstances, including medical or security-related situations, and would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

Section 25 – Confidential Information

Operational and emergency response information forms part of internal safety, security, and incident management frameworks. Such information is treated as confidential, and disclosure would harm the legitimate interests of the authority and undermine the integrity of airport operations.

3.Public Interest Test

In accordance with Section 21 of the Act, a public interest assessment has been conducted.

While there is a public interest in transparency regarding emergency services, disclosure of the requested information would:

- Compromise aviation and public safety
- Undermine the effectiveness of emergency response systems
- Expose sensitive operational and security-related information
- Infringe upon the privacy of individuals involved in incidents

These risks significantly outweigh the public interest in disclosure.

4.Conclusion

Given the nature of the information requested and the risks associated with disclosure within an airport operational environment, the authority has determined that the request cannot be fulfilled in whole or in part.
